

DR N̄ZINGA HARRISON

With nearly two decades of experience in the medical field, Dr. Nzinga Harrison is an innovator and game-changer who has devoted her career to treating vulnerable populations and reengineering systems and institutions for more compassionate client care.

A double-board certified physician in addiction medicine and psychiatry, Dr. Harrison currently serves as Co-Founder & Chief Medical Officer for Eleanor Health, a value-based provider of comprehensive, outpatient addiction treatment. In addition to being a pioneer in virtual patient care during the Covid-19 pandemic, her background includes a B.S. from Howard University, an M.D. from the University of Pennsylvania, and residency training at Emory University.

In her role as Chief Medical Officer, and previously as Senior Vice President, Dr. Harrison treats individuals from marginalized communities with substance use and other physical disorders and is a vocal advocate for stigma reduction, with an emphasis on the necessity for whole-person care as individuals and societies seek to recover from and prevent substance use disorders. She has served on multiple boards in various roles including Trustee for the Board of the Georgia Psychiatric Physicians Association, Vice-Chair for the Board of Breakthru House, Inc., and Secretary for the Board of Veritas, Inc. She is presently Vice-Chair for the Board of Physicians for Criminal Justice Reform, Inc., a national organization she co-founded.

The Indianapolis native also hosts a weekly podcast, "In Recovery", where she answers any and all questions about addiction, treatment, mental health, recovery, and everything in between.
